Renewable Energy

Renewable energy has been used for thousands of years. Also known as clean energy renewable energy comes from natural sources and can be constantly replenished.

There are several types of renewable energy. One example is hydropower. Long ago, people discovered how to use the energy of moving water to power machines that helped with farming. Now, hydropower is the largest renewable energy source in the United States.

Another type of clean energy is solar power. Solar panels can harness the sun's energy and used it to power homes and businesses. Batteries can also be used to store solar power. As long as the sun continues to smile down on us, its power will benefit our economy.

A Visit to London

I'll never forget when I visited my cousin Jack in London last year. The first thing we did was tour the city. Jack offered to take us to the British Museum, Big Ben, and Hyde Park. It was awesome!

Later, we got to hitch a ride on the subway. Jack said we could either ride the London Eye or see Buckingham Palace. We were hungry, so we grabbed some candy and chips on the way to the palace, where we saw the changing of the guard.

By the end of the day, I was ready to hit the sack!

Mark's Visit

I was quite delighted to learn my cousin Mark would visit while on holiday.

"I propose we visit the British Museum," I said. "If you're a bibliophile, you'll love the library there."

As quick as a wink, we were off. We toured the city, rode the underground, and even purchased some sweets and crisps before visiting the palace.

I spent the rest of the evening reclining in my bedroom. We had a brilliant time, but I was quite tuckered out!

Changing Times

The Industrial Revolution changed the economic and social face of America in the late 1700s. This was a time when the ingenuity of men like Eli Whitney and Samuel Slater helped to develop new ways of organizing work, mostly based on science and technological advances.

Before this time, goods like clothing were manufactured by hand at home. Making yarn for a new shirt was a long process that wasn't quick, and it wasn't easy. However, Slater's invention of a new spinning machine changed all that.

Soon, skilled craftsmen and artisans were no longer needed. Unskilled workers could now do the work instead. This meant that more products could be produced in less time, and the price of goods was much more affordable.

Cooking With Grandma

"Grandma, I got all our ingredients out. What should we do first?" Today, Grandma is teaching me to make an apple pie.

"Well, I reckon' the first thing we need to do is peel and slice our apples." She shows me how to carefully cut each apple and soon we have a bowl full of fruit ready to be seasoned.

"Next, we'll add the spices we need cinnamon nutmeg and a dash of salt. And a whole lotta sugar!" After we sprinkle the spices, I sneak a slice of apple to taste.

"Now hold your horses! We won't have enough for our pie if you eat them all now. I'm fixin' to show you my favorite part." She demonstrates the special way she crimps the edge of the crust, and then we placed it in the oven. Now all we had to do is wait!
